

Sutton stands at an even six feet, built like a leading man from an old-school adventure novel—strong square jaw, wavy blond hair with a stubborn cowlick that refuses to follow orders, and a mustache that gives him just the right amount of rakish charm. His straight eyebrows sit above almond-brown eyes that always seem like they're sizing up the world with quiet amusement. His Grecian nose, dignified with a slight droop and that straight smile? Couldn't be more perfect!

Sutton is a polished professional in the world of pharmaceutical sales his personality alone makes him a standout manager. Beneath the charm, there's a sincere side to Sutton, someone who listens as intently as he speaks—and who genuinely values his team. When he's off the clock, Sutton's a man of action, whether it's launching a frisbee with pinpoint accuracy or navigating the slopes with the grace of someone born with skis on his feet. But his real passion lies in the guitar, where he's just as methodical and dedicated as he is in business. His guitar playing isn't just music—it's a conversation, subtle yet powerful, that draws people in. And when it comes to food? Sutton's loyalty is unwavering—there's no meal more perfect, no comfort more absolute, than a bowl of mac and cheese.
